

Report:

The practice identifies needed resources by assessing collected population information. FMC collects information on occupation, marital status, predominant health concerns etc. on the patient's first visit. The town's socioeconomic status and stratification can be found by using the online census to look at categories like food stamp usage and yearly income. By knowing what the patients need, the practice can provide better care and help patients find the resources they need. These resources may include, but are not limited to: AA meeting, local food banks, single mother support groups etc.
